outreach serving tool

As you work through this resource, ask God for wisdom, insight, opportunities, and boldness to act.

Where should I serve?

To determine where you should be responsible, consider our common calling (to engage the brokenness around us by loving and serving others), what God has gifted you to do (your individuality), and evaluate where he has placed you (your current opportunities).

Calling

Our common calling as believers is to engage the world around us by loving and serving others.

Brainstorm the unique experiences, skill set, passions, and interests you have that could be used to meet the needs of others.

Individuality

What are my unique experiences, abilities, interests resources, passions, strengths, and gifts?

When assessing our response to the brokenness we see, give thoughtful attention to which causes you should care about and which you will ultimately be held responsible for.

What issues/organizations/people are you concerned about over which you have no influence?

Concerns

List of issues or people I am concerned about:

What current opportunities of personal ministry to serve others exist for you right now? Write down one or two issues, organizations, or people you can partner with and take responsibility for. If you realize you need to make changes to get in proximity to those in need, what is one action step you can take this week to move in that direction?

Opportunities

Issues, people, and organizations in front of me

What issues/organizations/people that you have influence with are in front of you? Consider places you live, work, exercise, play, and frequent. You may need to make some significant changes to get in proximity to those who are in need.

Opportunities

One issue, organization, or person God will hold me responsible for:

Opportunities

One action step I will take this week to partner with this organization or person:

Tell someone and MOVE!
